Dear [REDACTED]

I wish to express my gratitude -- and the gratitude of all of us in the United States Disarmament Administration -- for the intense effort which you have devoted in recent weeks as a member of the Consultative Group on Conventional Forces and Armaments. You have worked tirelessly and most productively on this complex problem, and I am grateful indeed.

As you are well aware, there is a painful urgency about this task. I regret that the time limitations imposed upon your group have been so stringent, but I am well pleased with the report which has been produced.

Your Group's Chairman, General John M. Hull, has informed me that although you were among the last members assigned to his Group you proved to be a most valuable and energetic contributor to the study of the problem and the construction of the report; and that your particular qualifications afforded the Group unexcelled expertise in a specialized area without which the deliberations might have been less profitable.

As we proceed with the study of these complex problems in the weeks and months ahead, I would like to feel that I can call upon you again for your advice and help.

I am
